Long time ago, ①a man named John lived in a town near *Manchester in England. He was a good man and worked hard in a factory, but he couldn't make enough money. *No matter who saw him, he looked poor.

One night, John was returning from his sister's house. His sister was rich, and *should have shared her money with John, but she was *selfish. The only thing she would give John each year was a *ham to eat for his birthday.

John carried the big ham on his shoulder. When he walked on a road, he saw an old woman. The woman looked (A). He soon understood her *situation and (ア give) her a piece of ham to eat. She thanked John, and asked why he had such a big ham. He told her about his life and his sister.

"I can help you," she said. And then, she took ②something brown out of her old bag. "Give me your ham *in exchange for this."

"What is this?" asked John. "What can it do?"

"This is a special salt *grinder. It will *grind salt from nothing," she said. In those days, salt was very (B). "But, please be careful," she *warned. "When you have (イ finish) grinding salt, you have to say the words, grind no more. You must not forget the words. If you forget them, the grinder can't stop."

John thanked the woman, took the salt grinder and went home in a hurry.

He soon became rich, and because he was kind, (C). One day, the sister came to visit. John thought he could believe in his sister and ③showed her the grinder, but during the night, the sister *stole the grinder, ran down to the *harbor, and jumped on a ship. She *hid near the back of the ship and began to fill *sacks with salt. Soon, all the sacks were full of salt.

"Stop!" she *yelled, but the grinder didn't stop. She knew that she *should have asked how to stop the grinder, but it was too late.

"(D)" he shouted, as salt filled the ship and it (ウ begin) to *sink down to the *bottom of the sea. But the grinder still did not (E). It is still grinding today, and this is why the sea is *salty.
